MARINE CURONICLE.

Meteorological and Aquatic. In the particular of ugliness, yesterday surpassed any day of the past month. Showery and threatening all day, the industrious Bluffer was in a quandary as to what habit to adopt for his respective pursuit-whether to brave the weather in his elegant new spring suit, or try its ici-situdes in the dilapidated remains of last winter's duds, those were the absorbing themes that agitated his usual lacid mind. The prudent remained at ome and watched his flowers and vegetables as they grew and prospered under the influence of the prevailing damp-ness, and provided shelter for the little chicks that chirrupped about the backyard with head erect and drooping wings, dodging the rain-drops. There is no doubt about it, we are on the verge of a rainy season; and we will act wisely if we prepare for it. The anticipated June rise in the rivers is discussed in marine circles, and the reports from above tend to increase our fears of such a disaster. Our official table and telegraphic correspondence appended furnish the latest
